PlayerQ: How to set the Permissions to 'Allow all program users' for Appdata How do I set the Permissions for the data files under C:\Users\username\AppData\Roaming? We have a Java application that reads data files, and it works fine for me, but for one of our administrators it doesn't work, because apparently 'Allow all program users' is not set for his user account. The Java app reads from the files under the AppData folder (C:\Users\username\AppData\Roaming), and the permissions that I see for his account for that folder is as follows: How can I set the Allow all program users to the data files under C:\Users\username\AppData\Roaming? A: The problem was solved, I just had to re-install Java, and then make sure to reboot the computer. For other people who have the same problem, the solution is to Remove all previous Java installations from the computer.

Re-install Java. Q: Preventing duplicated user accounts I'm working on an Android app for university and I'm going to get my results by user + phone number. I want to add a new person to my app, but I want to avoid adding a duplicate user account. Is there any built-in method to avoid duplicated user accounts? Thank you, A: You can use the build in ContactsContract.Data table.

Here's a table-driven approach for all contacts. The key here is the combination of `Data.MIMETYPE` (contacts or vcards) and `Data.RAWCONTENT`. I also encourage you to use the `CREATE_DOCUMENT_`

It is a game that is designed to be difficult and you get rewarded with the best of the best. The game also has a great soundtrack that will get stuck
