This invention relates to a process for the production of a starch-based plastic in which two starch-containing materials are intimately intermixed during the plastic forming process, and to the product of the process. Plastics have been known for quite some time. They are usually made of plastics materials. More recently, however, efforts have been made to produce plastics which have a texture similar to leather. It is believed that such products are referred to as plastic leathers. A plastic fabric suitable for imitation leather purposes is described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,755,189, the specification of which is incorporated herein by reference. Processes for the production of molded leathers are described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,969,237, the specification of which is incorporated herein by reference. That patent relates to a process which comprises the steps of applying a dispersion of a substantially dry, low-viscosity, high-solids content, thermoplastic material in the form of thin layers over at least a portion of the surfaces of two sets of plates and then pressing the plates together while the thin plastic layers are still soft. The examples show that all the plastic material applied is removed from the surface of the resulting product, and that the leather-like appearance of the molded product is not particularly distinctive. It is an object of the present invention to provide a process which will produce an integrated product in which substantially all the plastic material will remain in the final product. 77a5ca646e

Converts a series of text files, possibly containing macros, from a text file containing macros into a series of files, which contain macros, as well as the macros. After conversion, the text file containing macros is updated with a new last modified date and a version number (1 or 2) that can be used to distinguish the files created by the application.

Advertisement: If you are looking for a simplistic program that can automate the process of applying modifications to your text without wrapping your mind around troublesome tasks, a software solution such as TextManipulator could prove quite helpful.

First things first, you should know that TextManipulator is a portable application, which means carrying it around on a USB stick is possible. Can reverse the character or word order of your text Regarding the software utility's user interface, it need be mentioned that its entire appearance is uncomplicated, as if it were designed with ease of navigation in mind. This is actually in accordance with the fact that the tool's feature set is not that expanded. To be more specific, what the program can do is reverse the character or word order of any given text you can type in or simply paste in the left-side panel. You should be aware that, whatever modifications you apply to your text, they will be visible in its entirety, which means you have no option to restrict the changes to a specific paragraph or string of words. In other words, if you want to process just snippets of your text, you need to insert them separately from the original document, which is quite an inconvenience. Lets you restore the original text However, note that a button canceling the effects of the manipulation process is available, so you can restore the original text at any time. As for TextManipulator's performance, you may want to know that no inconsistent behavior was shown during our tests, with the program proving overall responsive. However, the obvious lack of features does remain an issue, and further improvements and innovations
