The taste distributions are broad and visually contaminated with vague structures (**[Figure S4]{#pone.0045678.s004}{ref-type="supplementary-material"}**) so a pre-processing method, such as the one employed in [pone.0045678-Kimmich3], was used to extract the pure taste and enhance the features of interest. Aims of this study were to investigate how three different behavioral models of taste evolve over time. Preliminary studies (data not shown) indicated that the data did not stabilize after 10-12 hours and as such the data points in [Figure 2]{#pone-0045678-g002}{ref-type="fig"} and [3]{#pone-0045678-g003}{ref-type="fig"} (the earliest 3 hours) were excluded in the final analysis. However, the results of subsequent analyses are similar to those of [Figure 2]{#pone-0045678-g002}{ref-type="fig"} and [3]{#pone-0045678-g003}{ref-type="fig"} and therefore only the results up to 12 hours are shown in [Figure 2]{#pone-0045678-g002}{ref-type="fig"}. Moreover, because mass merchandiser stores have large quantities of food items, an individual is able to purchase a relatively large quantity of food items in one trip. However, individuals are increasingly finding that they prefer to cook their food items in the store. Specifically, individuals are finding that they prefer to purchase the packaged food items, prepare the food items in the store, and carry the food items to their cars or back to their homes. In addition, individuals prefer to remove the food items from the packages in which they are sold, and/or warm the food items with the individual's own cooking utensils, such as pots, pans, microwaves, and the like. Therefore, it would be desirable to provide a means for conveniently, more efficiently,
