Endotoxin, a toxic component of gram-negative bacteria, is present in the cell wall of all gram-negative bacteria. Endotoxin is believed to trigger an acute pro-inflammatory response characterized by fever, tachycardia, leukocyte invasion, and release of inflammatory cytokines. Among the cellular components of the innate immune system, monocytes are thought to play a critical role in initiating the pro-inflammatory response to endotoxin. Monocytes can be activated by binding to endotoxin via the CD14 receptor (a plasma membrane protein), and the interaction of monocyte CD14 with endotoxin induces the release of cytokines such as IL-1, IL-6, TNF-alpha and GM-CSF, as well as other cellular activation signals. To date, no endogenous inhibitor of CD14-dependent monocyte activation by endotoxin has been identified, suggesting that the immune system may have evolved to keep monocyte activation to a minimal level in order to preserve the integrity of the mononuclear phagocyte system. Complement is a system of blood proteins, many of which have either direct or indirect relevance 0cc13bf012
