Dubtron is a VST plugin for generating dubstep wobble basses and other nasty basses. This plugin can be used to create dubstep wobble basses with abnormal beats like wobble basses, wobble basses with a dry drum with a snare on top of a sub synth, low-end dubstep baselines and more. It also allows for detune of the sub synth or even detuning of the bass and the drums. Dubtron is not a bass synthesizer, but rather a plugin to add a characteristic dubstep wobble effect to a bass line. The typical dubstep wobble effect is the snare sound with a low pitched sub-bass and a higher pitched snare with a muffled drum sound on top of it. The sub synth in the demo is set to detune by 9 semitones. So it makes a wobble bass effect like a sub woofer in a car or a small amplifier with a bass and the same frequency. Dubtron is capable of dry-waving bass lines. Dry-waving a sub bass in the context of dubstep typically means that the damping of the sub synth is set very low. And when you wobble, or dry-wave a bass note, it is typically done with low-mids. And with Dubtron, you can still wobble and dry-wave your bass line. Low-mids and sub basses are often as dry as possible and the effect of it being dry can be heard on the snare in the demo, where the low-mids of the bass and the snare are nearly perfectly in phase, whereas the snare dry-waved sound is completely out of phase. Dubtron can also be used to reduce the low end on bass lines without a sub bass. Dubtron's wobble bass effect can also be combined with dry drum sounds on top of it. The two sounds can be set to be in perfect unison, but they can also be set apart by 4 semitones. As of version 0.9.6, Dubtron can also be used to create a little harder bass wobble bass effect using the bass with an altered sub harmonic. Some of the synthesizers and oscillators are set to detune by 9 semitones. And this is meant to create a secondary effect, where the exact same frequency is used, but is slightly detuned
