There is no audio on my Asus P5PE-VM motherboard sound (pins 2 and 4). There's nothing (player, applications, device manager, etc.) on my Windows 7 Ultimate box that indicates that there's an audio card in there. So what should I do? A: It would appear the P5PE-VM motherboard relies on the CPU's AGP slot to do its audio bit. With a PCI-E slot (as on an Nvidia video card) or with a PCIe slot (as on many video cards), there is no hardcoded audio PCI-E slot, and an AGP slot requires the AGP PCI-E slot be shut down. Therefore, your PC is NOT missing any audio hardware. The P5PE-VM motherboard is not designed for an audio PCI-E slot. I suggest you upgrade to a motherboard which has either a PCI-E slot or a motherboard with a sound card built in. The video card I have in the board works fine with Windows 7, and therefore I have no motherboard-related problems, but you should be careful when you open the front of the computer. There are many fragile "plugs" for the motherboard and a few are more fragile than they appear to be. That being said, this motherboard is ancient. If you have the money, you should probably buy a used motherboard from a "second-hand shop" - I found a motherboard for $15 which works fine. The video is a bit out of date, but it has audio via a real speaker. On the motherboard, there is also a SPDIF/SPDIF-OUT connector which you can plug a sound card into. Your only limitation is what you can afford. The poster was a one-of-a-kind prank.
